

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A system and method for managing, manipulating, and analyzing data over a distributed network, such as the Internet is generally applicable to any field which could benefit from a centralized system for gathering, storing and analyzing data from multiple remote data sources over a distributed network. The present invention is particularly applicable for gathering, storing and analyzing health data from remotely located health data sources, such as remotely located medical devices, via the Internet.